SECTION I. THE ASSESSMENT OF COMMUNICATIVE COMPETENCE (30 points)

Read the text and do the tasks below the text.

The Most Productive Day of the Week

It's possible that while you are at work, you may dream about a month of Sundays, but your boss wishes for a week of Tuesdays. That's because she or he probably knows that productivity is one of the main factors supporting a company's growth. A recent poll shows that workers are most productive on Tuesdays! An employment agency carried out a survey of office managers which shows that by the middle of the week a dramatic productivity decrease occurs. While Monday is considered second in "productivity value," only nine percent of office managers think Wednesday is the peak productivity day. And only five percent believe that the most productive day of the week is Thursday. However, forty-eight percent of the managers say that Tuesday is, by far, the most productive day of the week.

A close analysis of workweek rhythms offers some obvious reasons for those survey results. First of all, Monday is full of meetings, designed to "get things moving," and everybody knows meetings aren't very productive. Wednesday is "hump day" - to get over it as painlessly as possible, a worker thinks, and the week is more than halfway over. On Thursday, people are running out of energy; and on Friday, everybody's thinking about the weekend. There are reasons why the other days aren't productive, but what makes Tuesday special? On Tuesday employees hit peak performance because they are very focused on day-to-day activities. Also, it's usually the first day of the week when they're focused on their own task. They're not in meetings that take them away from their main responsibilities. And so, in 10 hours, they're doing 20-hour work. That's productive, but it's also tough.

This does not mean that nothing happens on the last three days of the workweek. Things do not get so casual that people are sitting with their feet on desks, drinking coffee and talking on the phone all day, but there's a definite lack of focus. The pace softens and the rhythm slows down. And this is not healthy: it produces tiredness and decreases productivity. To prevent this midweek slowdown, some management consultants suggest that employers avoid squeezing so many meetings into Mondays and answer the question: "What motivates people to work?". Variations in productivity are only natural, but both workers and bosses win when the peaks and valleys are less dramatic than they are now.
